

INDIVISIBLE

Social and Economic Foundations of American Liberty

Leading Conservatives
Exchange Policy Perspectives

INDIVISIBLE

Social and Economic Foundations of American Liberty

Leading Conservatives
Exchange Policy Perspectives

INTRODUCTION BY JAY W. RICHARDS

CONTENTS

PREFACE	1
Jennifer A. Marshall and J.D. Foster, Ph.D.
INTRODUCTION	5
Jay W. Richards, Ph.D.
CIVIL SOCIETY	12
MORAL ARGUMENTS FOR LIMITING GOVERNMENT
Joseph G. Lehman
RULE OF LAW	17
ECONOMIC PROSPERITY REQUIRES THE RULE OF LAW
J. Kenneth Blackwell
LIFE	21
THE CAUSE OF LIFE CAN'T BE SEVERED FROM THE CAUSE OF FREEDOM
Representative Paul Ryan
FREE EXCHANGE	25
MORALITY AND ECONOMIC FREEDOM
Jim Daly with Glenn T. Stanton
MARRIAGE	31
THE LIMITED-GOVERNMENT CASE FOR MARRIAGE
Jennifer Roback Morse, Ph.D.
PROFIT	37
PROPHETS AND PROFIT
Marvin Olasky, Ph.D.
FAMILY	42
WASHINGTON'S WAR ON THE FAMILY AND FREE ENTERPRISE
Stephen Moore
WAGES	47
THE VALUE OF WAGES
Bishop Harry R. Jackson, Jr.
RELIGION	52
WHY FAITH IS A GOOD INVESTMENT
Arthur Brooks, Ph.D., and Robin Currie
INTERNATIONAL TRADE	56
WHY TRADE WORKS FOR FAMILY, COMMUNITY, AND SOVEREIGNTY
Ramesh Ponnuru
CULTURE	60
A CULTURE OF RESPONSIBILITY
Edwin J. Feulner, Ph.D.

PROPERTY	66
PROPERTY AND THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS
Representative Michele Bachmann
ENVIRONMENT	70
CONSERVING CREATION
Tony Perkins
EDUCATION	77
A UNIFIED VISION FOR EDUCATION CHOICE
Randy Hicks
CONTRIBUTOR BIOGRAPHIES	82

FREE EXCHANGE

Morality and Economic Freedom

BY JIM DALY WITH GLENN T. STANTON

I DID NOT COME FROM WEALTH, PRIVILEGE, OR INFLUENCE. Though I lived in one of the most prosperous corners of the world, there were days in my childhood when I did not know where my next meal would come from or where I would lay my head for sleep that night. For far too much of my childhood, I was an orphan. My mother died when I was young and my father and stepfather both left me for destinations unknown and without any connection. While most of my schoolmates' greatest concern was what their mothers would serve for dessert that night, my deepest fear was who would watch out for me. Who, if anyone, would provide for my needs? Beyond basic food and shelter, it sure wasn't the foster home I was placed in.

But you would never know any of this by looking at me today. Thankfully, I have come to a good place in life, far beyond my wildest expectations. I earned an advanced degree in business administration, over many years, while working full-time. By God's grace, I now hold a challenging and deeply fulfilling job as the president and CEO of a large international nonprofit, which I joined two decades ago in an entry-level management position.

My most important position is the honor of being the husband of a beautiful and super-smart wife and the father of two beautiful, energetic young boys. We have a lovely home in a nice neighborhood. Our life is settled, if still a little hectic. I am committed to making sure my boys have a very different childhood from mine.

While the pain and hardship of my youth had one source, the good in my life today springs from two very different sources. The first was my remaining family. Even though my parents were taken from me, I had a gracious band of older siblings who became my surrogate parents, loving me, watching out for me, and making sure I stayed on (or, at times, returned to) a straight path. It was a dysfunctional family—teenage siblings should not have to be parents—but a family all the same.

The second source was a land that afforded me the opportunity to improve my lot in life based only on my desire and willingness to work hard to do so. This is the same system (somewhat new in the long course of human experience) that has lifted millions of men, women, and children out of poverty, anxiety, struggle, and early death. The evidence of human migration in the past few centuries is unmistakable. We find people voting for this society not only with their feet but also from the depths of their very souls, risking fortune and life for the chance to prosper under its benefits. The benefits of the American Experiment are not

Jim Daly

Glenn T. Stanton

We know that nations that allow free exchange, including the solid right to own property, do much better economically and socially than those that do not.

a well-kept secret. Its benefits include many things but, most importantly, America has meant freedom, including economic freedom. We know that nations that allow free exchange, including the solid right to own property, do much better economically and socially than those that do not.¹⁹

I recognize God as the provider of these two rich sources in my life, and in what follows, I want to show how three things come together for the benefit of all humanity: God, family, and free-market economics.

Few see economics and religious faith as having much to say to each other. But that is the fault of a small and parochial faith. God has much to say about how we interact with each other in the market as well as about our responsibilities to our families and our neighbors. As a committed Christian seeking to live authentically both in my personal conviction and professional position, the command upon me is quite simple. Jesus took the Ten Commandments given to Moses as well as all the teachings of the Prophets and summed them up in two simple but far-reaching commands:

1. Love God with your whole being.
2. Love your neighbor as yourself.

These commands connect those who seek to obey them to both the eternal and the temporal, giving us responsibilities both in the Here and the After—both in the realm of the spirit as well as that of our flesh, blood, appetites, and feelings.

ECONOMIC FREEDOM AND PROSPERITY

In considering the lives of our neighbors—remember that every day technology widens the circle of who our neighbor is—we must be concerned with the fair and free exchange of goods and services. Theologian Paul Tillich once explained to his students that socialism “is the only possible economic system from the Christian point of view.” Since he said that in 1957, however, the verdict upon socialism as a vehicle for improving our lot has been unmistakably delivered. It does not work because it does not correspond to the motions of the human heart and soul. It is not socialism but economic freedom that most closely corresponds with our human needs and desires.

Adam Smith recognized an old truth in 1776 when he argued in The Wealth of Nations that real abundance is not found in a nation's supply of gold and silver, but in the ability of its people to create and trade goods and services and to do so freely, driven by a desire to improve their own interest. Smith's famous "invisible hand" is the self-regulating nature of markets that discourages us from filling our own stomachs to the exclusion of others (even if we would like to) but naturally rewards individuals when they seek their own good by meeting the needs of others. As for the market's ability to punish mere selfishness, think of the consequences that some Wall Street and banking executives face today.

19 Heritage Foundation/Wall Street Journal Index of Economic Freedom, at <http://www.heritage.org/index/>.

It is not socialism but economic freedom that most closely corresponds with our human needs and desires.

In fact, Smith believed that individuals' pursuit of their own self-interest actually results in promoting the good of society to a greater extent than if each person had intentionally set out to do so through other means. That's the fruit of the invisible hand. Smith's "hand" is far better at distributing goods and services than are state planners; thus, Milton Friedman's summation of Smith's theory—"the possibility of cooperation without coercion."²⁰

Time and experience, as well as the flow of immigration, have proved Smith largely correct. This is not rooted in the nature of nations, but in the nature of nations' citizens, all created in a particular image. Every healthy human being ever to walk the earth was created with a nearly inexhaustible capacity to create or provide something of value and, in doing so, to enhance his own life as well as to promote the happiness and satisfaction of those around him. But those capacities come to greater fruition in societies that protect economic freedom.

As Ludwig von Mises recognized:

Within the frame of social cooperation there can emerge between members of society feelings of sympathy and friendship and a sense of belonging together. These feelings are the source of man's most delightful and most sublime experiences. They are the most precious adornment of life.²¹

We are made by a relational God who freely chose to create the world. Genesis, the book of both Jews and Christians, tells us we are each created in and after His image. It tells us that God gave us and put us in a community of His people and it is there that we are happiest. The Christian story, building on this, tells us that we are creatures of a triune God. God is inherently relational. In some 20 Milton Friedman, introduction to Leonard E. Read, "I, Pencil: My Family Tree as Told to Leonard E. Read" (Irvington-on-Hudson, New York: The Foundation for Economic Education, Inc., December 1958), at <http://www.econlib.org/library/Essays/rdPnc1.html> (accessed July 20, 2009).

21 Ludwig von Mises, Human Action, 4th edition, Chapter 13, Section 1, "Human Cooperation" (Irvington-on-Hudson, New York: The Foundation for Economic Education, 1996), p. 143.

mysterious sense, God is not a mere individual, nor a couple, but a “community” of three Persons—yet He remains always one God.

As creatures made in His image, we desire to relate to others, as well as to create and provide for ourselves and for others. Our sinful hearts will move us toward a naked individualism in which our self-interest devolves into selfishness—as it did with my father and stepfather. Yet such “individualism” does not satisfy, but rather leads to isolation and misery. The “happy individualist” is an oxymoron if ever there was one.

Free markets and true free exchange are economic displays of this theological truth and metaphysical reality. It is what we are made for. In free exchanges, we are not isolated islands but social individuals who can meet the needs of others while prospering ourselves, without losing our own individual identity.

Michael Novak makes this point elegantly in the first sentence of his consequential book, The Spirit of Democratic Capitalism:

Of all systems of political economy which have shaped our history, none has so revolutionized ordinary expectations of human life—lengthened the life span, made the elimination of poverty and famine thinkable, enlarged the range of human choice—as democratic capitalism.²²

He later explains:

It is no accident that democratic capitalism arose first in Jewish-Christian lands (or that it is imitable only in analogous cultures). Apart from certain specific views of human life and human hope, neither a democratic polity nor a market economy makes sense. If those who live under democratic capitalism lost sight of the moral foundations of the system, a loss of morale is likely to occur... Necessary reforms and advances cannot be attempted when individuals within the system have lost sight of its proper ideals.²³

MORALS, VALUES, AND ECONOMIC FREEDOM

This economic system relies on certain ideals and values present both in our government and in our citizenry. In the long run, widespread moral ignorance will bring—along with other ills—economic paralysis. And this is precisely what we are seeing today. Our present and deeply troubling economic realities are more the result of our moral failures than our market failures. Our appetites have become much larger and stronger than the constraints of our souls. We prefer instant to delayed gratification. We are creating “men without Virtuous people are most likely created in good families. This is a fundamental and unavoidable fact.

22 Michael Novak, The Spirit of Democratic Capitalism (Lanham, Md.: Madison Books, 1991), p. 13.

23 Ibid., pp. 334–335.

chests,” as C.S. Lewis put it. Drawing from Plato’s idea that each person is governed by three sources—the thinking (head) rules the appetites (stomach) through moral strength (chest)—Lewis explains, “It is by this middle element that man is man: for by his intellect he is mere spirit and by his appetite, mere animal.”²⁴ A market economy demands participants whose “chests” can govern both their minds and their stomachs.

How do we get the kind of people our markets require? Where are they made? It does not start in the marketplace, nor even in Sunday School or the classroom (although these last two are necessary helps once the process is started). Virtuous people are most likely created in good families. This is a fundamental and unavoidable fact.

British Prime Minister Gordon Brown recognized this in a public forum on economics the day before the convening of the monumental 2009 G-20 Summit in London. He began his remarks by explaining that he would not talk about the fine points of economic theory or market minutiae. (That is something you might expect from the man who served as the Chancellor of the Exchequer under former Prime Minister Tony Blair longer than any other leader held the position in the modern age.) He said he would, rather, speak of the “enduring values—indeed the enduring virtues—that we have inherited from the past, which must infuse our ideals and hopes for the future.” While his speech fell short on the global order, Brown eloquently evoked the core of local order:

And I want to suggest to all of you here today that this most modern of crises, the first financial crisis of the global age, has confirmed the enduring importance of the most timeless of truths: *that our financial system must be founded on the very same values that are at the heart of the best of our family lives.*²⁵ (Emphasis added.)

Brown was talking about basic truth and honesty. Without such honesty, there can be no trust. And, without trust, there can be no vibrant system of trade. It is in the family where we first learn how to care for ourselves and then of the need and duty to care for others. Family is where love is first learned and demonstrated and, hopefully, selfishness discouraged. It is where we learn both self-confidence and security, leading to empathy and altruism. It is where we learn the value of hard work, sacrifice, and honesty. It is where we learn that we ought to tell the truth rather than lie.

This is as much a human fact as a Christian one. The Greek philosopher Aristotle held that “the family is the association established by nature for the supply of men’s everyday wants.” As families developed, he said, thus came the village and, out of the villages, the state arises. The family is also the most powerful human elevator of a free market of exchange.

24 C. S. Lewis, The Abolition of Man (New York: Macmillan Publishing Company, 1947), p. 34.

25 Gordon Brown, “Speech and Q&A at St. Paul’s Cathedral,” London, England, March 31, 2009, at <http://www.number10.gov.uk/Page18858> (accessed August 21, 2009).

If we care for others and want to lift them out of misery and poverty and on to a better, healthier life, we cannot be apathetic about the economic system that has proved itself better than others at doing this. Nor can we be laissez-faire about the social conditions that create what is required to drive this system. The free market is the best and fairest system for allowing human beings to create resources and then distributing the resources we need to live prosperous and ever-improving lives. But this system cannot function strongly and fairly if our culture produces “men without chests.”

This is why we at Focus on the Family do the upstream work we do to help families thrive worldwide—because we want other little boys and girls that are in the unfortunate place I once was to have the resources and opportunities to create a better, more hopeful life for themselves.

Jim Daly is president and CEO of Focus on the Family. Glenn T. Stanton is director of global family formation studies at Focus on the Family.

Contributor Biographies

MICHELE BACHMANN represents the 6th District of Minnesota in the U.S. House of Representatives. She serves on the Financial Services Committee and has been a leading advocate for bipartisan earmark reform and tax relief as well as a staunch opponent of wasteful government spending.

J. KENNETH BLACKWELL is a senior fellow for family empowerment at the Family Research Council and a senior fellow at the American Civil Rights Union. He is a former Secretary of State for Ohio. He serves on the board of directors of the Club for Growth and the National Taxpayers Union and is a columnist for The New York Sun. Blackwell is the co-author (with Jerome Corsi) of Rebuilding America: A Prescription for Creating Strong Families, Building the Wealth of Working People, and Ending Welfare.

ARTHUR BROOKS, PH.D., is president of the American Enterprise Institute. His writings explore the interrelationships between culture, politics, and economic life and include three books: Who Really Cares? (an analysis of charitable giving in America); Social Entrepreneurship: A Modern Approach to Social Value Creation; and Gross National Happiness: Why Happiness Matters for America—and How We Can Get More of It.

ROBIN CURRIE is a senior writer and editor at the American Enterprise Institute. He is a former editor at Time Life Books, where he worked for 11 years. Among his books there were What Life Was Like Amid Splendor and Intrigue: Byzantine Empire A.D. 330–1453 and The American Story: War Between Brothers. He is the author of the forthcoming National Geographic book The Letter and the Scroll: What Archaeology Tells Us About the Bible.

JIM DALY is president and CEO of Focus on the Family, where he has served in various capacities for 20 years. His first book, Finding Home: An Imperfect Path to Faith and Family, tracks his pathway to success from a disadvantaged childhood and the loss of his parents. Daly's second book, Stronger (forthcoming), explores ways in which family tragedy can hold new direction and purpose in life.

EDWIN J. FEULNER, PH.D., is president and a founding trustee of The Heritage Foundation. He is former president and current treasurer of the Mont Pelerin Society and has served as a trustee and chairman of the board of the Intercollegiate Studies Institute. In 1989, he was awarded the Presidential Citizens Medal by President Reagan as “a leader of the conservative movement.” Feulner has authored seven books, including Getting America Right, Leadership for America, Intellectual Pilgrims, and The March of Freedom.

J.D. FOSTER, PH.D., is the Norman B. Ture senior fellow in the economics of fiscal policy at The Heritage Foundation, specializing in long-term reform in tax policy and entitlements. Previously, Foster served as associate director for economic policy at the White House Office of Management and Budget and senior advisor in economics at the Treasury Department's Office of Tax Policy.

RANDY HICKS is president of Georgia Family Council, a nonprofit organization whose mission is to foster the conditions in which individuals, families, and communities thrive. He also serves on the Georgia Supreme Court's Commission on Children, Marriage, and Family Law. He has led Georgia Family Council since 1997, working to alleviate the suffering caused by family breakdown and promoting family- and community-based collaboration while seeking to raise awareness of the connection between human flourishing, culture, and public policy.

HARRY R. JACKSON, JR., serves as senior pastor of Hope Christian Church in the Washington, D.C., area and is founder and chairman of the High Impact Leadership Coalition. Jackson's daily radio commentary, The Truth in Black and White, reaches audiences of more than 400 stations, and he is a frequent guest commentator in a variety of print and aired media. His books include: The Truth in Black and White; High Impact African-American Churches (with George Barna); Personal Faith, Public Policy (with Tony Perkins); and In-Laws, Outlaws, and the Functional Family.

JOSEPH G. LEHMAN is president of the Mackinac Center for Public Policy, a Michigan-based research and educational institute, and serves as the director of the Chicago-based Sam Adams Alliance, which promotes the use of new-media vehicles to advance economic freedom and individual liberty. Lehman has written extensively on free-market principles and policies.

JENNIFER A. MARSHALL is director of domestic policy studies and the Richard and Helen DeVos Center for Religion and Civil Society at The Heritage Foundation. Previously, she worked on cultural policy issues at Empower America and served as director of family studies at the Family Research Council. Marshall is the author of Now and Not Yet: Making Sense of Single Life in the Twenty-First Century.

STEPHEN MOORE is senior economics writer for the editorial board of The Wall Street Journal. Prior to joining the Journal, Moore served as founder and president of the Free Enterprise Fund, a free-market nonprofit advocacy group. He is the author of five books, including It's Getting Better All the Time: The 100 Greatest Trends of the Last Century; Bullish on Bush: How the Ownership Society Will Make America Stronger; and The End of Prosperity: How Higher Taxes Will Doom the Economy—If We Let It Happen (co-authored with Arthur Laffer and Peter Tanous).

JENNIFER ROBACK MORSE, PH.D., is founder and president of the Ruth Institute, a project of the National Organization for Marriage that promotes marriage as a bond of love between “one man and one woman for life.” She has been a research fellow at the Acton Institute since its founding in 1990. Morse is the author of three books, including Smart Sex: Finding Life-Long Love in a Hook-Up World and Love and Economics: It Takes a Family to Raise a Village.

MARVIN OLASKY, PH.D., is provost of The King’s College in New York, editor-in-chief of the national news magazine WORLD, and a senior fellow at the Acton Institute. Olasky previously served as professor of journalism at the University of Texas at Austin. He has published more than 2,000 magazine and newspaper articles and has written 20 books, including The Tragedy of American Compassion, The American Leadership Tradition, and The Religions Next Door.

TONY PERKINS is president of Family Research Council. He previously served in the Louisiana legislature for eight years. Perkins hosts a regular national radio program, Washington Watch Weekly, with commentaries broadcast on 300 stations. He appears frequently on national broadcast and cable news programs and issues daily pro-family e-mail updates to tens of thousands of grassroots activists. In 2008, he co-authored (with Bishop Harry R. Jackson, Jr.) Personal Faith, Public Policy.

RAMESH PONNURU is a senior editor of National Review and a columnist for Time. He has published numerous articles in national newspapers and policy magazines and appears frequently on major news commentary television programs. He is the author of The Party of Death: The Democrats, the Media, the Courts, and the Disregard for Human Life.

JAY W. RICHARDS, PH.D., is a visiting fellow in The Heritage Foundation’s Richard and Helen DeVos Center for Religion and Civil Society. He has written four books, including The Privileged Planet (co-authored with astronomer Guillermo Gonzalez), and, most recently, Money, Greed, and God: Why Capitalism is the Solution and Not the Problem. Richards is also the executive producer of two documentaries from the Acton Institute: The Call of the Entrepreneur and The Birth of Freedom.

PAUL RYAN represents the 1st District of Wisconsin in the U.S. House of Representatives and is currently serving his sixth term. He is the ranking member of the House Budget Committee and a senior member of the House Ways and Means Committee.

GLENN T. STANTON serves as director of global family formation studies at Focus on the Family and directs a research project on international family formation trends at the Institute of Marriage and Family in Ottawa. Stanton has authored three books: Why Marriage Matters: Reasons to Believe in Marriage in Postmodern Society, My Crazy, Imperfect Christian Family; and Marriage on Trial: The Case Against Same-Sex Marriage and Parenting.

214 Massachusetts Avenue, NE
Washington, DC 20002

heritage.org